

CONTENTS

MARCH 2010
VOLUME 100 • NUMBER 3

LAND MATTERS | 13

LETTERS | 15

RIPRAP | 18

Up in the air at a Philadelphia arboretum, green roofs cruise into uncharted waters, and every flower tells a story in an international competition drawing on traditions both ancient and modern.

Edited by Linda McIntyre

EDITOR'S CHOICE | 24

City United, Park Fragmented

Two design writers share their thoughts on the Rose Kennedy Greenway.

By Marty Carlock and Heidi Hohmann, ASLA

ART IN THE LANDSCAPE | 38

High Tide, Low Tide

A seaside public art project weathers design by committee(s).

By Marty Carlock

CHANGING PLACES | 44

Resurrecting the "Adventure-Style" Playground

Two new playgrounds in Central Park honor the past and offer hope for the future of playground design.

By Daniel Jost, ASLA

EDUCATION | 64

Mastering Landscape Architecture

A survey of graduate programs gives a glimpse of the future of the profession.

By Lolly Tai, FASLA, and Rob Kuper, ASLA

FIRM FOCUS | 78

Thinking Big...and Small

Philadelphia Green is a flexible nonprofit working at a variety of scales to fight blight, create community, and beautify its namesake city.

By Daniel Jost, ASLA

Gateways to The Desert

Three new trailheads for Scottsdale's McDowell Sonoran Preserve are designed to have as light a touch as possible on the existing landscape.

By Rachel Hill,
Student ASLA

100

RESIDENTIAL DESIGN | 92

Borrowing the Beach

A Malibu coastal garden creates a natural link between mountains and sea.

By Dobra Prinzing

BOOKS | 112

PRODUCT PROFILES | 114

DISPLAY AD INDEX | 116

BUYER'S GUIDE INDEX | 117

PERSPECTIVE | 132

Don't Sweat the Invasion

Some scientists are challenging conventional approaches to invasive species.

By Rebecca Tuhus-Dubrow