

CONTENTS

SEPTEMBER 2010

VOLUME 100 • NUMBER 9

LAND MATTERS | 29

LETTERS | 31

RIPRAP | 34

A visitor center grows in Vancouver, a guide to gizmo landscapes, hot new features in a pair of NYC playgrounds, and a democratic takeover of the tarmac in Berlin.

Edited by Linda McIntyre

DETAILS | 42

Campus Contemplation

In Kansas, students at Benedictine College have a new place to pray.

By Lisa Speckhardt

RESIDENTIAL DESIGN | 52

Heart of Stone

A Maine native describes his land in a single Bangor garden.

By Jane Roy Brown

INTERNATIONAL DESIGN | 64

Doubly Strange

Two unique public spaces enliven downtown Winnipeg.

By Adam Regn Arvidson, ASLA

CONSTRUCTION | 78

Worth the Weight

Contractors need to see a clear hierarchy in the lines of your drawings.

By Annette P. Wilkus, ASLA

TECHNOLOGY | 84

Software for the Squeezed

Small or new firms can buy—or rent—design programs without going bankrupt.

By Jeff Yoders

BUSINESS | 90

Where to Grow from Here?

In a rough economy, landscape architects have learned to cut back. But they still need to learn to move ahead, too.

By Ernest Beck

PRACTICE | 96

In the Green Seat

In firms, nonprofits, parks, and academia, landscape architects are taking the lead on sustainability.

By Claire Latané, ASLA

URBAN PARKS | 110

Senior Circuit

A playground in London's Hyde Park is designed for older exercisers.

By John Gendall

Buried Treasure

The sequel for a Cold War hideaway is a precious cache of American culture.

By Linda McIntyre

154

Farmland Gone Broadband

A return visit to Sprint, nine years and a telecom revolution later.

By Frank Edgerton Martin

164

STUDENT AWARDS | 118

Well on Their Way

The recipients of the 2010 ASLA Student Awards are looking to turn ideals into reality.

By Douglas Gordon

BOOKS | 181

PRODUCT PROFILES | 186

DISPLAY AD INDEX | 188

BUYER'S GUIDE INDEX | 190

CRITIC AT LARGE | 208

Matters of Scale

Landscape architects define their future when they define the scope of their work.

By Carl Steinitz, Honorary ASLA